At the very least, I would hope that you would comment on the good work that the Church is accomplishing around the world in addressing educational failures, drug addiction, criminal reform and other difficult areas. Focusing on very negative claims made by former members—allegations in which you graciously concede you don't know the actual truth—can have a negative impact on the way others who are not familiar with the Church's amazing accomplishments view the Church. If indeed the findings of Mr. Hubbard have dramatically advanced our ability to resolve problems in the areas noted above, then giving an inordinate amount of time to disgruntled detractors will only prolong the suffering of persons who could otherwise be helped. - Z.G.
